From the Director’s Office ...

We Are Growing

By the beginning of the fall term this year, we will have opened our new international law library. We hope that on your next visit to Washington or to the Law Center, you will come to visit; we would love to give you a tour.

The new library will occupy the two middle floors of the Eric Hotung international law building. It will have capacity for 110,000 volumes and seating for 180. Eventually, three-quarters of the collection in the new building will be housed in compact stacks. There will also be both a computer learning center and a microform reading room. Students will access the internet by means of wireless connections throughout the building.

Architecturally, the library will have large windows on three sides, creating a very light and pleasant environment throughout. Some of the windows will look out over the new south quadrangle and some of them will look back over to McDonough Hall. Two large archway windows on opposite sides of the main floor will bring back memories of the historic Georgetown Law Center arch that once graced the law school building at 506 E Street, N.W., and now overlooks the G Street Quad.

The new library, and indeed the new buildings, will greatly enhance the Law Center campus. Please come visit; we’d love to show you around.

National Preservation Program Takes Off

Last year, with the help of the Friends, Georgetown sponsored the first-ever national conference on the preservation of legal information for the 21st century. The conference considered the issues surrounding the preservation of both print and born-digital legal information, observing specifically that most print information is printed on paper that deteriorates with time, and most born-digital information is essentially ephemeral, disappearing from its original source in a matter of just a few years.

Following the conference, 17 different libraries pledged a significant amount of money to spearhead an effort to deal with these issues. The first two projects are (1) the completion of an inventory of what has already been preserved and (2) the development of a white paper to analyze the issue, propose solutions, and support grant initiatives for future projects. The inventory will survey on-going projects by which existing legal information has already been preserved (usually by conversion to another format). Once the data from this review is analyzed, it will reveal what remains to be done. The White Paper will contain a historical review, an analysis of the technical and policy issues, development of some proposed solutions, and advocacy for grant support.

Current Updates on Legal Research

Brown v. Board of Education Documents Online

Electronic access to official court and government documents has broadened substantially in recent months. A wealth of current and historical legal documents is now widely and freely accessible on the internet.

Of particular interest are documents that help bring significant historical events to us. The 50th anniversary of the 1954 U.S. Supreme Court Brown v. Board of Education decision reveals that documents and images not widely available a few years ago are now accessible with a few clicks of the mouse and the keyboard. Look at the following web sites to view actual images from the Brown and Little Rock Central High School eras. Here are some great web sites to view these historical materials and powerful images.

- The Supreme Court Historical Society has pictures of Linda Brown and several other plaintiffs in school desegregation cases at http://www.supremecourthistory.org/02_history/subs_history/02_c13.html.

- The Dwight D. Eisenhower Library has posted documents such as the original complaint and court order filed with the U.S. District Court in 1951, as well as, letters and memoranda related to the suits. See http://www.eisenhower.utexas.edu/dl/Civil_Rights_BrownvsBoE/BrownvsBOEfiles.html. Also see http://www.eisenhower.utexas.edu/dl/littlerock/littlerockdocuments.html for documents on the ensuing Little Rock era.

- The Library of Congress has posted letters from Supreme Court Justices William O. Douglas, Harold H. Burton and Felix Frankfurter to Chief Justice Earl Warren in support of the decision he wrote in Brown v. Board of Education. See http://memory.loc.gov/cgi-bin/query/D?mcc:2:/temp/~ammem_rG7M: You may also search the Prints and Photographs catalog at the Library for images available for online viewing at http://www.loc.gov/rr/print/catalog.html (use search terms such as ‘brown v board of education’ and ‘school desegregation’).

- The University of Michigan Library’s Brown v. Board of Education page at http://www.lib.umich.edu/exhibits/brownarchive/ includes access to the oral arguments and photographs from Brown.

- The printed Brown decision can also be viewed at http://www.ourdocuments.gov/doc.php?flash=old&doc=87.

As always, when seeking documents, it is very important to use authoritative web sites and portals. Governmental, educational and other proven sites should be consulted for the best resources and information. For guidance on documents available on the internet, and other reference sources, please feel free to contact the Reference Department at libref@law.georgetown.edu, call 202/662-9140, or see our web site at http://www.ll.georgetown.edu/staff/ps/reference/index.cfm. Alumni Portal

The Georgetown University Law Library website provides access to the electronic resources and services available at the Library. It contains Researcher Portals that organize links to the most popular resources used by our different patron types – Faculty, Students, Alumni, Friends, and the Public.

The Alumni Portal contains links to functional categories of the website – Find, Connect, Study and Learn. Within those categories, you’ll see tips on finding articles and jurisdictional sources, links to such legal databases as LII, Findlaw, Lexis and Westlaw, information on study areas and library hours, and services to help you research more efficiently, including our Research Tutorials and reference desk services.

In the coming year, we will be stepping up our commitment to the portals as part of our website reorganization. Watch for new content and functionality as we expand the technological foundation of the site.

John Fialka (L’65) has covered politics, military, diplomatic and national security during his career as a journalist. He began at the Baltimore Sun and later moved to the Washington Star. In 1981, he went to the Wall Street Journal where he was their lead reporter in the Gulf War. He is currently reporting on energy and environmental matters for the Journal. He has earned several journalistic awards, among which are the Raymond Clapper, the Worth Bingham and the National Headliners awards.

Fialka is also an accomplished author. His most recent work, Sisters: Catholic Nuns and the Making of America, was published in January 2003 by the St. Martin’s Press and received the 2004 Christopher Book Award. Sisters explores the pivotal role of nuns in the building of American society. Fialka has directed 70% of the proceeds from the sale of Sisters to SOAR (Support Our Aging Religious!) and the remainder to Holy Trinity Church in Washington, D.C. His earlier works include War by Other Means: Economic Espionage in America (W.W. Norton, 1997) , and Hotel Warriors: Covering the Gulf War (Woodrow Wilson Center Press, 1992), with Peter Braestup.
