

Please join Workplace Flexibility 2010 and the New America Foundation for a briefing on

Meeting the Needs of Today's Families: The Role of Workplace Flexibility

Monday, May 1 • 12:00PM–1:30PM

Dirksen Senate Office Building • Room 430

Workplace Flexibility 2010 of Georgetown University Law Center and the Workforce and Family Program of the New America Foundation are bringing together a panel of researchers studying the mismatch between the needs of America's families and the way the workplace is currently structured. These experts have studied how this mismatch impacts marital well-being, child-rearing, and caregiving responsibilities, including elder care. The briefing will also highlight how workplace flexibility benefits families and how one company is using flexibility as a key management strategy.

Workplace Flexibility 2010 is an Alfred P. Sloan Foundation Initiative based at Georgetown University Law Center. Its mission is to expand the substantive conversation around workplace flexibility and to bring a range of constituencies together to develop consensus-based policy solutions to advance workplace flexibility.

New America's Workforce and Family Program engages policy-makers, employers, and workers in hopes of developing and advancing ideas that can improve the lives of workers and strengthen families while enhancing the competitiveness of American businesses.
